Academic year 2021–2022

International Governance

RISP053 – Fall – 6 ECTS

Course Description

This course will explore current debates around the governance of the global and international system. Emphasis will be put on different sets of institutional forms and ad hoc arrangements as well as different sets of actors (such as formal and informal institutions, nonstate actors, regime complexity, or the vitality of international organizations). Based on these structural and agentic elements, we will examine the opportunities and constraints that have resulted in formulating and implementing multilateral policies globally and regionally.

Syllabus

Course Aims

The objectives of the course include:

1. introducing different conceptions of governance that have emerged over the past century
2. providing a basis for a sophisticated understanding of theoretical work on multilateral governance and international organizations (and a heightened ability to differentiate what is genuinely new from what is not)
3. provoking reflection and debate on contemporary global governance challenges (e.g. the emerging authority of non-state actors and the setting up of new types of governance arrangements)

Course Structure

The course is structured in three sections. In the first three weeks, we set up the course by discussing how to read and think about global governance. We will build a foundation for the course by discussing different conceptual and theoretical debates. Some exercises help consolidate the expectations for the course.

In the main eight-week component of the course (from 'Power' to 'Performance') we will tackle a number of themes in the study of international actors and institutions. The emphasis will be on identifying different manifestations of governance structures, a variety of actors and institutions that shape governance structures, and the performance and legitimacy of international governance mechanisms.

The last few weeks reserves some time for students to reflect on what they have learned and apply it to a particular international governance case of their choice. Consultation sessions are available for students to discuss their plans.

Course Materials

There is no required textbook for this course. All materials can be found on Moodle.

Course Evaluation

Evaluation will consist of three assessment items:

Questions (30%): Each midday before class in the main section of the course, students will submit three questions—one for each reading. Consider questions at the level of the article/chapter, section, paragraph, or sentence. I will share the grading criteria in the first class and we will discuss this more in the second week. Only 6 week's questions will count towards students' grade; students will skip the week they are critic/defendant, and they can skip another week or try to improve their grade.

Authors' critic and defendant (30%): Three students will be assigned to each of the 8 main weeks of the course. Their role will be to act as critic for one of the assigned papers, and defendant of another. Defendants should be ready to introduce the paper and contextualise its role, while critics are expected to lead the class in interrogating its assumptions and challenging its application. You can sign up here.

Final report (40%): Students will organise into groups of 3-4 students to write individual essays on an empirical domain of application they are interested in that answer a shared, collectively phrased question. The word limit for each piece is 1200 words, not including tables, figures, bibliography. Note that this word limit is tight, and so expect to spend time refining your prose to make your argument most succinctly and effectively. The reports will be graded on: (1) how well framed and motivated the question is and how well the 3-4 papers cross-reference and speak to one another comparatively; (2) how well composed and argued the student's individual paper is; and (3) how well researched and developed each application to an empirical domain is. The groups' papers should be submitted together, either as a collection of online blogs or PDFs.

Course Policies

Auditing is not possible for this course at this time.

Grading is according to a 10 point scale. I reserve the right to rescale the final grades at the end of the course, but as a general guide a 5 is roughly a passing grade.

Plagiarism means presenting another's thoughts, ideas, or expressions as one's own, and is a breach of academic integrity that is not tolerated at the Graduate Institute. Students who present others' work as their own may receive a 0. Please cite appropriately and contact the TA if you have any doubts.

This syllabus is subject to cantonal and Institute policies in response to the pandemic. We will discuss how, if at all, it has been updated in light of conditions in the first week of class.
